DEDICATION

TO Miss Laura Clifford Barney, of Washington and Paris, a philanthropic Lady of high culture and extensive information, an authoress of wide renown, a linguist and a scholar, well known in both hemispheres, (being also a descendant of the Abrahamic race,) this Epic of "The Holy Land", is most respectfully dedicated to her, the aforesaid Lady, without even her knowledge or consent, by

THE AUTHOR.

INTRODUCTION

I N this Epic of the Holy Land the Author has aimed to give in easy flowing measure, the Story of the Bible, pertaining to some of its most salient features, beginning with the Patriarchs and Prophets; and referring to some of the wonderful events in the career of the Nazarine; then picturing many of the phases in the life of its people down through long centuries; referring to the prophecies, of their future national rehabilitation when nations shall learn war no more; with the sword beaten into plow shares, and spears into pruning hooks, and naught to molest or make afraid.

The style and measure of Gray's Elegy, the classic of that immortal Bard, was adopted, and adhered to thruout, as the one best suited to such a subject. The Poem is matchless, in its rhythmic expression of the events pertaining to so lofty a theme, and its Author was TRULY the Amanuensis of SPIRIT in giving it expression, and claims no credit for originality, but regards himself merely the selected channel, chosen by spirit, to proclaim the Epic to all man's race. With unbounded faith in his mission to accomplish so great a work, he confidently submits its lines to the just discrimination of all Authors, Scholars and Poets, of every land and clime.

THE AUTHOR.

PALESTINE

BLEST Holy Land! It bears a sacred name

'Bout that best man, whose feet
earth ever trod.

My Muse! Come now, with light of Heaven's flame,

Then it in Truth shall touch the Ark of God.

MAY it, most reverent tribute pay thy Shrine, Though few the leagues within thy widest bounds;
Thy space, marked on the globe
by boundary line,
Is small, but in it all of Truth was found.

YEA e'en the grandest empires earth has known, Ne'er felt the griefs and glories known to thee;
Thy records, from the lowly hut to throne,
Reveal the truth that maketh mankind free.

THY past, of yesterday's historic lore,
Serves all the tender
ministries of life;
In it through love's and mem'ries
sacred store,
Its Mission is to heal
the world of strife.

ITS records of great prophets,
priests and Kings,
Of deeds and words, told in our parents' way,
Holds yet the thoughts of wise
and old and sings,
Through all the years of time's eternal day.

HER maiden dreams of days
that were to dawn,
Light Sweet Rebecca's face
beside the well, Love's herald, one from far away comes on;
She goes with him in strange far lands to dwell.

TO greet the bridal morn,
and husband's smile;
Leaves father's roof forever,
and its fold;
Proceeds with Herald many a weary mile,
That she her lover's face might first behold.

AND next of her first loved but latest won,
By him the first to bear
proud Israel's name;
The loving Rachel, guarding
flocks alone,
The first one chosen, but the last who came.

THRO' service long, twice seven weary years,
Of Jacob's toil to gain her heart and hand;
At life's sad close she sought her grave in tears, In sight of Bethlehem--her native land.

OUR hearts as, this pathetic tale is told,
In every clime o'er earth and land and sea,
Are filled with grief—all ages
young or old,
All peoples, nations, races
bond or free.

THEN love's sweet page of faithful, charming Ruth, Gleaning through patient toil,
the fallen grain;
A woman pure in wisdom's
charms and truth,
Whose touching love, seems almost kin to pain.

THROUGH her sweet loves, supremest words—all time Were spoke: and since then,
every wooer's speech
Is beggared by her words of love sublime
That seem beyond poor common mortal's reach.

IN Judah's land there, too, are seen those dames
Of iron heart, of hammer
and of spear;
Judith and Jael, fierce and deadly names:
Killed foes who slept, and never knew a fear.

WE yet may trace in darker out-lines still,
Ahabs dread Queen, whose name
stains all the years;
And Naboth's blood, which gave to dogs their fill;
The stolen vineyard—and a world of tears.

BUT when earth's noblest one went forth to die,
No woman's lips gave forth
the taunt of scorn;
Nor woman's hand to wield the
lash on high,
Nor press upon his brow,
the crown—the thorn.

NO woman's might to drive
thro' hands and feet,
The cruel nails, or thrust
the deadly spear,
Into his side: let us
again repeat,
No woman's hand was here,
no, no, not here.

THE Christ, by man betrayed,
by man denied,
Was e'er by woman loved,
by her adored;
She, last to leave her dead
at even tide,
And first at morn, to greet the risen Lord.

* * * * *

IN battle's rage thy strong man
rushes forth,

Armed with a jawbone, that he wielded well;

The enemy succumbs and falls to earth;

Then he soon falls a prey to beauty's spell.

IN fair Delilah's smiles,
 he basks, unwarned,
While all his strength,
 is softly shorn away:
He soon perceives to what extent he's harmed;
And waits with blinded eyes,
 another day:

'TILL there shall grow, his locks of strength again;
Then pulls the rock-built temples,
pillars down;
Expires, in midst of foes, 'mong
thousands slain;
A vict'ry worthy of a victor's crown.

* * * * *

WE also read, of fair-haired winsome lad,
From father's flocks to camps of warriors brave;
Who from a babbling brook, some pebbles had Placed in his sling; a mighty cause to save.

THE giant fell to rise on earth no more;

The weaker arm was nerved to win the fight,

It ever shall be thus all nations o'er;

The wrong shall ever fall before the right.

AND o'er thy distant past
the clouds hang low,
The lightning's flash, revealing Gibeon's sword;
A down the stream of time, we hear and know,
The thunders of Jehovah,
thro' his word.

AS when on Gideon's heights,
was conflict waged;
Joshua bidding the Sun and moon stand still;
At his command they halt,
while battle raged;
Stood fixed—Ajalons vale,
and Gideon's hill.

WITH clashing swords and loosened bows was rife,
The field thus bristling,
with its stabbing spears;
And victor's shouts, mingled with ebbing life,
And lives gone out midst gaping wounds and tears.

EARTH'S longest day at last
was changed to night,
And every foe that met
that morning's fray,
In death was stilled, or far away in flight,
When rose the sun on next succeeding day.

HER warriors brave as earth
hadst ever known,
Since mortal man with mortal man e'er strove
For mas-ter-y of peoples
or a throne,
Or yet shall strive, till earth is ruled by love.

TILL all the years of strife,
forever gone;
And all the implements of war and hate,
Are forged for nobler use
when wars are done;
To plow and reap the harvests
of the State.

WHEN every race shall dwell in tents of peace;
And if grave doubts along their pathway rise,
Their Sages wisdom shall make war to cease,
And view God's glory in a Nation's eyes.

GOD'S wisdom doth from misty lines divide,
Between the false and true,
and guides us still;
And teaches us in truth
to ere abide;
And thro' his law, to do our FATHER'S will.

AND when earth's councils meet in pomp so great,
To reconstruct the temple
of their laws,
Each statute, framed to build the laws of State,
On Moses' code is based for primal cause.

THE code of righteousness
from Moses' hand, Thro' which all peoples' Nations
still are blest,
Was framed to meet the wants of every land,
And golden rule is blazoned on its crest.

THEY Poets sang in measures
sweet and long;

And thro' the world, their echoes grandly sweep

Down all the years, on star-crowned heights of song:

Made millions, on old earth, rejoice or weep.

THE sweetest strains that mortal lips ere sung,
Were heard in Judah's land,
mid strifes and wars,
And sweeter than the words
of lips or tongue,
Or voice-less music, of the morning stars.

THRO' Heaven's high change-
less one, thy prophets wrote, Who knew all future, and all past as well;
And saw thro' thrice a thousand years just note;
Their visions do these latter days foretell.

THE day springs crescent flame, their eyes saw true;
A-down long years, as thousands drifted by,
The tears of grief on cold dead
faces view;
All this and yet didst know,
their God was nigh;

AND borne upon love's wing-ed words, we hear Sweet notes of joy, when winters days are o'er;
Mid songs of birds and victors
hymns of cheer,
Like joyous laughter's peals,
on wings to soar.

BEYOND the vale whereon death's shadow lies,
Thy prophets rested, on the arm that leads;
The fetters of the grave,
asunder flies;
And in the stars, his destiny,
man reads.

HE clasps the hands of loved ones waiting there,
And balm of leaves, from life's immortal tree,
Heals every hurt of grief of pain,
despair;
While truth spreads out afar o'er every Sea.

WHOSE rippling waves,
like mingled glass with fire,
Spread out o'er plains of formless earth and clod,
And all the souls of earth,
redeemed, as-pire
To drink from living springs, near throne of God.

* * * * *

WE read of old, there stood on mountain crest,
The "prophet guide," who saw unrolled afar,
Cross Jordan's stream, the promised land of rest;
Just one long glimpse, thence did his sight debar.

One glimpse, then turned away
to look no more,
And found a grave, not made by mortal hand,
Not seen by human eye,
ah, never more,
The prophet's viewless grave,
near "Promised Land."

A DOWN the stream of Jordan's rocky way,
From Hermon's Mount to Sea of Gal-i-lee,
Where fishers' nets are spread
along today,
Yea, downward still—where Sodom used to be:

AND old "Gomorraah," too,
both under waves,
That roll, 'neath pitying stars,
that shine on high,
O'er the curst cities,
in their watery graves, Forever hid, from gaze of human eye.

'TIS now small stream, a mighty brook, scarce more;
Upon its breast no sea-borne commerce floats;
Its waves no barges plow—
a barren shore;
A stream where boys might play,
with rafts and boats.

IN thoughts that sometimes sway the souls of men,
It seems to flow, twixt lands of faith and doubt,
Or sweeps the bounds of earth and Heaven, then;
It puts the Amazons of time—
 to rout.

* * * * *

IN Judah's land held sacred whole earth round,
All kindred's tongues and races,
bond or free,
The works of God's own precious son, were found;
His words revealing truth,
that all may see.

AS sorrow's child he knew both grief and woe;
And from his crucifix
there reaches now,
His dear hand out, in all this world below,
To soothe and comfort every aching brow.

REBUKING those whose lives were living lies,
And scorning those who trampled
on the poor,
Or saw the “motes” in other people’s eyes,
(But not “beams” in their own)
we may be sure.

THESE whited Sepulchers—
false lives—deceit:

Rebuked with words, like viper's fangs that sting,

Made record, of their wrong spent lives complete,

That through all ages since,
is heard to ring.

WITH knotted cords, from temple of most high,
He sternly drove the money
changers forth;
But quick to hear the faintest
human cry,
His heart went out to all the sons of earth.

HE healed disease of ev'ry form and name;

The deaf were made to hear,
the blind to see;

The lepers cleansed, and ev'ry kind of claim:

To all he spoke the truth
and set them free.

THE sinner, too, He cleansed
by spoken word:

He raised the dead; did from the coffin save;

He said to Lazarus, "Come forth,"
he heard,

Arose at once, and came from out the grave.

THE widow's son, Jairus'
daughter, too,

Restored to life, by Christ,

GOD'S CHOSEN ONE,

Who said, these works

His followers, should do;

And greater, through believers,

should be done.

AND little children often to him came,
On whom his pity fell
like Hermon's dews;
On erring sons of men. The weak,
the lame,
To them the needed help,
did ne'er refuse.

NO chiding word was ever heard to fall

From Jesus' lips, to those in woman's form;

"Neither do I condemn thee,"
that was all;

"Go sin no more," and you are safe from harm.

THUS spake the Christ to one who strayed aside Like some plumed bird, from happy leafy nest;
In mire and dirt, its brilliant plumes to hide;
In ways of wrong, that always bring un-rest.

BY sinful, wicked men, she was accused,

Whose hearts he searched, with keen and biting truth;

To answer him, they silently
refused;

And from his presence shrank, abashed, forsooth.

THEN trembling stood the culprit, all alone,

And on her head sweet words of mercy fell,

“Go thou in peace, and sin no more,
—atone”;

(That’s what he said or meant),
and all is well.

OF all earth's myriad souls,
this Prince of God, Unmatched in chivalry,
in love supreme;
No purer, better one,
earth ever trod:
His burden was forgiveness,
it doth seem.

THE proudest badge that earth's poor mortals wear, Was once the cross, from which his spirit passed;
The crown that mocked his brow,
and golden hair,
Is greatest diadem, of all
earth hast.

SO poor in life, He owned no resting place;

Now, earth is filled with temples
for His praise,

In death 'tween thieves, was meant for His disgrace;

But millions fought for tomb,
in later days.

GREAT marshalled hosts, the crusades war didst wage From many lands and climes, to wrest His grave
From land of infidels, through long, dark age;
O'er which their flag in triumph,
still doth wave.

Imperial Rome;
But not o'er "David's City" of
"Great King",
Doth she still wait alone,
His coming "Home"?
"Till Shiloh's Bride," shall make the welkin ring?

SOME claimed that Christ
would be Judea's King;
To free her land from Caesar's iron sway;
And would the Kingly crown of David bring His false accusers, charged this in his day.

BY Roman laws in Roman Court, 'twas tried;

A Roman Judge announced the sad decree;

'Twas Roman thorns and nails and spear for side:

His soul was launched from Roman cross or tree.

THE seamless garb that wrapped his human form,
Was portioned off, by Roman dice
there thrown;
And Pilate, with his crafty
smile of scorn,
In pretense, washed his hands
when deed was done.

MADE bold to charge the crime, 'gainst Judah's race;
And that foul seed sown in the soil of time,
Has grown through all the years
still grows apace;
Its yield is tears and shame,
in every clime.

IN all the ages since,
its upas bloom,
Has poisoned fairest lands
beneath the sun;
Stains Russia's snows today,
with blood and gloom;
Spares not the aged, nor the little one.

WHAT heinous wrongs, long years have piled on thee;
Thy God who sees, with sleepless eye may know;
Few lifted voices, hands
thro' epochs we;
See in defense; as ages
onward flow.

THE torches lighted at thine
altar fires,
Were tossed as burning brands
around the world;
Yea, far and wide, dread dragon
teeth of wars,
In every land where Jews didst live, were hurled.

EARTH'S arm-ed hosts rushed forth to seize the prey; Mohammed's Hordes, from dark Arabia's sands,
Invoked the name of God,
to maim and slay,
The scattered homeless ones from Judah's lands.

ON every Jewish head, was set a price;
Their foes, from every earthly quarter, came;
The earth was drenched in blood,
for love of Christ;
'Twould flush the prince of devils cheek, with shame.

THO' thro' all earth known lands, their homes are made;
But like that form of life,
that takes its hue
From trees or rock whereon
it rests; each shade
It rests upon, becomes its color true:

BUT otherwise, remains thereafter still—
Unchanged; and so do they,
adopt such dress,
Habits and styles, as those with whom they dwell;
And to discern their race,
'twould be a guess.

THEY think and speak and learn, in alien tongues;
And yet are sons of Abraham, alway;
Their curses, thro' all lands,
are voiced, and rung;
And ere have been, since crucifixion day.

“CHRIST-KILLERS,” dealers
in old clothes, refuse:

Insulting epithets on ev’ry hand;

To them some well known,

Christian people use;

These terms of hate, reproach,

in ev’ry land.

BUT fair to look upon,

thy daughters are,

In grace and charms, of noble womanhood.

In slums, disgrace and brothels,

seldom there,

But pure and chaste and true,

among the good.

TIS said when master workman,
made earth, sun:—

When all its new-crowned beauties, round him lay,

Before His Sabbath rest,

from toil was done;

He left the gates of Heaven

ajar, that day:

THEN "Mother love," the tenderest thought of Him;
There, nestling in a woman's heart,
was found,
And linked with man's, filled
measure to the brim:
And since has filled old earth,
the world around.

FROM man's first breath, until her days are o'er,
He needs no earthly balm, to bind
his wound:
None ere but mothers, on this mundane shore,
For none like hers, who loved him first, is found.

* * * * *

THINE eager sons, the world around are known;
Their eagle faces, throng the marts of trade;
Earth's jewels, diamonds, gold and precious stone,
Are owned by Jews, of ev'ry class and grade.

THEY hold in grasp, the treasures of each land
'Tis thro' their hands, earths streams of gold are poured;
And mighty Empires, Kingdoms great and grand,
Must come to them—where earth's great wealth is stored:

AND bring the bonds, those yet unborn, shall pay; Ere sword is drawn, or shot of mighty gun
Is heard around the world,
some sudden day,
When carnage 'tween two nations has begun.

IMMORTAL race, none like it e'er before;

Has lived five thousand years,
yea, never dies;

Accurst, peeled, scattered, haled
all countries o'er;

No pity ever found,
to heed their cries:

AND yet has lived, survived thro' all the days,
That reach from Jacob down,
five thousand years;
And left their mark, with stamped impress always,
Mid persecutions, wars,
oppressions, tears.

THROUGH all the years,
some genius of their race Has risen high above
earth's gentile brood;
Stands out like "Beaconsfield," with shining face,
And mid earth's storms and trials,
stands for good.

OUR thoughts just now span thro' five thousand years;
From Jacob's son, to England in our day;
From Joseph to Disraeli,
both great seers,
Through whom we see, God ever led the way.

AROUND the world by fireside, tale is told,
Of Jacob's sons—en route for Egypt's grain;
And how by them was youngest,
(Joseph) sold,
For stated sum, to Ishmaelites,
for gain.

THE youthful dreamer, soon was found to stand By Pharaoh's throne, to where he dreamed his way;
Became that Monarch's guide,
for Egypt's land;
Through troublous times and famine, in that day.

WHEN rain came not, and dews had ceased to fall;
And famine reigned, in Jacob's country sore;
'Twas told, "There's corn in Egypt,
'nough for all";
And thousands hastened there,
to lay in store.

FROM Canaan far, came Joseph's brothers then,
From withered fields, and starving flocks of kine; Thro' weary lands they came,
these famished men;
With gold, to purchase food, and corn and wine.

AND there, they found the prince of Egypt's land Was Joseph, whom they once had sold as slave;
These strange events, were guided by God's hand;
From great distress, his famished ones to save.

FIRST exile of his race, his fame is spread Beyond the everlasting
hills of time;
Another one, who sleeps,
with England's dead,
Was great premier, Disraeli,
man sublime!

HE stood beside earth's greatest throne, as guide To Queen of greatest empire, man has made;
His power was greater than all men beside;
Dwarfed, Gentile Peers, and laid them in the shade.

* * * * *

ROUND Oceans' shores, in all earth's regions known,
No foot of land now claims Judea's sway,
No sails or flag, on any breezes blown;
Or ship on earth, belongs to her today.

BUT in the unseen kingdoms
of the soul,

Her throne is built, where proudly rests her crown;

And o'er her spirit empire,
ages roll,

And will continue through the ages down:

'TILL all earth's sons, of ev'ry
race and clime,
Till every soul, born since earth's morning hour,
Is through rebirth, and spirit
growth in time;
Reflecting God, in wisdom,
life and power.

FROM Holy men of old,
through Palestine,
Their thoughts, didst light the path, adown the years;
The path that leads to God,
in straightest line,
From carnal life, from sin,
disease and tears.

THEIR words from Him, are woven in our speech;

They come as light and truth,
on ev'ry wave;

Above the low baptismal fount
they reach;

Bind marriage vows, and stand beside the grave.

TEAR-BLINDED eyes, can see beyond the tomb
To mansions in the happy
summer-land;
Where all earth's children, will
at last find room,
In life of growth and progress,
ever grand.

EARTH'S wearied children,

seek in many ways,

Thro' creeds and sects, that sever

man from man;

In hopes and fears, strive for unending days;

But life immortal, is for all,

God's plan.

IN Palestine was first
revealed to man,
The first faint glimpse of God,
Eternal one,
Who sends the spring time and the harvest grand,
The treasures of the earth,
and rain and sun.

SENDS gorgeous visions,
of the changing year,
And tints the petals,
of the opening rose,
Paints sunset glories,
on the skies so clear,
And wafts His love, on ev'ry breeze that blows.

GOD spoke, and lo from out this void of time,
The orb of day, in all its glory shows;
And earth whereon God's works
revealed, sublime;
And sister worlds, that gem
the night arose.

LIKE bees that fly from flower, bloom to bloom,
His blazing comets flit
across the sky;
Each bearing rays of light,
through paths of gloom,
To yield results, through ages by and by.

HE forms the whirling stardust into worlds,
And scatters blazing suns
throughout all space; While circling planets, each on axis whirls,
With each through law,
forever in its place.

BEYOND the stars, where worlds are lost to sight, Still there is found, God's truth and mercy seat;
That rule His universe
from farth'rest night,
And glows in earth's green carpet,
at our feet.

WHEN earth's and heaven's scroll of time is read;
And great e-ter-ni-ty,
forever done;
God's care still lasts for all earth's living, dead;
For all, both young and old,
yea, every one.

THE Gods of Greece are gone,
like vanished dream;

Gone, yea! the shrine, of once the mighty Jove.

Dark Isis reigns no more,
on Egypt's stream;

But Israel's God, still reigns,
the God of love.

FAIR Palestine still stands beside the Sea;
Conquered by Babylon,
and Egypt yea;
And her great walls of pride,
that used to be;
Were felled by Titus, when old Rome held sway.

THE fierce barbarians took thy land by sword;
And captured all thy sons,
in cruel war;
And sold thy daughters down,
to nameless word;
And Judah's harps were hung,
on willows far.

THROUGH far off lands, thy scattered children wail Among the sons of men,
a homeless race;
Thy name with curses yet,
do men assail;
In many lands and almost ev'ry place.

THY neck in ev'ry land,
bears alien yoke;

And Moslem's hoof, is on thy soil today;

Where once in Temple's Halls, thou didst invoke

The name of God, in peace and praise, always.

WHERE sunbeams then,
flashed from its roofs of gold;
Now base-born Janizaries,
scoff thy name;
And ragged beggars, far from Christian fold,
Make light of ev'ry Christian work, or claim.

U P O N the stone, that seals Judea's tomb,
In many folds, long centuries
are laid;
From earth's far ends, thy children
yet shall come,
With faith like rock, of which thy hills are made.

THEY yet shall hear thy Shilohs' homeward call;
When by thy mount, the great law-giver stands;
With Judah's hosts returned then one and all;
From scattered homes, from exile,
all earth's lands.

S OON 'neath wide brooding
wings of cherubim,

The presence of Shekinah comes once more;

A Moses, in this age of twilight dim,

To lead thee to the Promised land's great shore.

GONE now thy dreams, with tidings from on high;
The visions gone, thy children
once didst see;
And mourning all these evil
days, with sigh,
With lifted hands, we pray
this prayer, for thee:

PRAYER.

OH, thou Jehovah God, who
from of old,
Didst Israel guide, by moving cloud by day
And fire by night, in pillars,
we are told;
Hear us, oh God, for Judah's land we pray.

THY hand built watery walls,
on either side,
Ledst Judah's feet, dry shod,
across the Sea;
And smote the King Sennech'rib,
in his pride;
And made his shattered hosts,
from sight to flee.

THY stricken children, heal
them, Lord, again;

And to them be, their falchion and their shield.

The barbed and poison shafts of hate and pain,

May they be turned; none to them
hence to yield.

LIFT up their hearts, oh God,
from carnal thing;

And lead their thoughts again,
to love of thee;

And when the fullness of the years shall bring,

From out-most isles and countries
over Sea

THINGS strange from far may Israel's race, returned, Once more abide within their father's land;
And may they all, from lessons
fully learned,
Dwell there, be fed, by thine own bounty grand,

ON corn and wine, grapes
purpling in the sun

That shines on hills and vales, of PALESTINE.

Give them again, we pray thee,
every one,

The "Holy vision," and the dream divine.

THAT Daniel knew, as captive
foreign land;
Or Jacob saw, where Nile's grand river runs;
And there to give his last of earth's command,
Called round his couch of death,
his many sons.

TEACH them, oh God, that worship pleasing thee, Must come from lives, that strive to thee obey;
That temples builded for thy praise, shouldst be The contrite heart, as taught by Christ—His day:

THAT noblest off'ring, on thine altars laid;
Is still the kindly deed,
in kindness done;
Makes purer incense, too,
of higher grade,
Than any other worship,
'neath the Sun.

BRING promised years of peace, that wait with Thee;
When nations war no more,
God speed the time
And when Thy will is done
o'er land and sea;
And none shall be afraid,
in any clime.

AND when earth's days, of time and change, are gone,
And mighty firmament, shall pass away;

Like garments that are laid aside and done,

Made white, from ev'ry stain,
of earthly clay.

SAVED thro' the dear example,
of thy son;

May Jews and Gentiles,

gather home to dwell!

In that fair City, may they,

be as one,

And know thro' all the ages—
